The intaglio vignette above was specially created for the Curtiss Aeroplane Export Corp. by the American Bank Note Company, for use on a stock certificate. It is known to exist on a specimen certificate, circa 1928. The central image features a sailing ship, globe, and a Curtiss flying boat, model NC-4. In 1919, this biplane made the first flight across the Atlantic, from Trepassey Harbour in Newfoundland to Lisbon, Portugal, with a 10-day stop in the Azores. The route can be seen on the globe.

The Indian River Steamboat Co. operated from the mid-1880s until about 1900, ferrying passengers and trade goods between Titusville and Jupiter along the wide lagoon. Roads were few at the time, making steamboats the most practical transport to southern Florida. But by 1894, the Florida East Coast Railway had reached West Palm Beach, pointing an end to the steamboat route. The company modeled its logo on the Indian Head cent, then in circulation, replacing "Liberty" in the headband with "I.R.S.Co." It was engraved by American Bank Note Co. and used on company letterhead.

These charming allegorical figures were engraved by the Security Bank Note Company in 1931, for possible use on stock certificates or bonds. The female figure with torch probably represents education and enlightenment, while the cherubic child spreading coins from a cornucopia signifies prosperity. A caduceus also appears in the vignette; though it has come to be associated with medicine, it was traditionally a symbol of commerce.
